COACH DAN DEVINE SURVEYS PACKERS FROM PRACTICE FIELD TOWER.

A NEW IDENTITY

By ART DALEY
Green Bay Press-Gazette

The Packers enter their 52nd season with a new identity.

After that many campaigns a new identity would seem to be old stuff . . . but that isn't necessarily so because a complete overhaul generally only follows a (1) winning period or (2) a highly successful draft brought on by, unfortunately, a losing period.

The Packer triple champs of 1929-30-31 were followed by a downswing that lasted until 1935 when Don Hutson entered the scene. It remained successful until after the 1944 championship when the battle with the old All-America Conference almost ruined the Packers.

New identities arrived and departed during the 1950s but the losers of that decade had some compensations. People like Jim Taylor, Paul Hornung, Bart Starr, Dave Hanner, Ron Kramer, Max McGee, Jim Ringo, Forrest Gregg, Bob Skoronski, Jerry Kramer, Bobby Dillon, Ray Nitschke and Johnny Symank, to mention a few, were drafted in the '50s and formed a nucleus for Vince Lombardi's amazing start in the 1960s.

The identity of the Packers didn't really change much for a couple of seasons after Lombardi left as Phil Bengtson nursed the ex-champs along with promising newcomers.

But the transition was already started and Dan Devine completed the identity by his use of many new players in 1971 and his 1972 draft, which features potential stars at three key positions—quarterback, Jerry Tagge; cornerback, Willie Buchanon; and kicker, Chester Marcol.

MAJOR BATTLE SHAPES UP AT LINEBACKER

Thus, the Packers now have the third youngest team in the NFL and by far the youngest if you don't count the long careers of Starr and Nitschke. Only six other leftovers of the 1967 Super Bowl champs remain—Doug Hart, Ken Bowman, Gale Gillingham, Bob Brown, Carroll Dale and Dave Robinson.

The new Packer identity is most noticeable in the offensive backfield—chiefly at quarterback,where young Scott Hunter last year earned his right to starting status in 1972. But he'll have to fight off determined bids by Starr, if he's healthy, and the promising Green Bay native, J. Tagge.

With the trade of Donny Anderson, Devine has committed the Packers to a solid ball-control type offense, which is the surest and safest way to score.

The Anderson trade brought the perfect power running mate for crashing John Brockington in the person of MacArthur Lane, thus giving the Packers amazing push straight ahead—plus outside running ability. For sheer speed, with power, Devine can turn loose Dave Hampton. The backs will operate behind a strong offensive line — Tackles Dick Himes, Francis Peay, Guards Bill Lueck and Gale Gillingham, and Center Ken Bowman.

If there is a question mark on offense it centers on the receiving. Only Carroll Dale and Rich McGeorge are in the star category. A Paul Warfield type of receiver will have to be developed from veteran John Spilis and such as Sam Dickerson, Dave Bailey, Leland Glass or Mike Carter.

The Packer defense was simply great in a few games last year, chiefly the 3-0 loss at Minnesota, and Devine made a major move to solidify the unit by naming Dave Hanner defensive coordinator. Hanner, a longtime Packer, will keep a special eye on the defensive line in hopes of getting a strong rush on the passer. Two of the big hopes here are rookie Dave Pureifory and second-year man Jim DeLisle who will join in the scramble with Clarence Williams, Bob Brown, Mike McCoy and Alden Roche.

A major battle shapes up at linebacker with the late acquisition of Doug Woodlief from the Rams, a six-year veteran, and Larry Ely from the Bengals. They join Jim Carter, Fred Carr, Tommy Crutcher, Robinson and Nitschke—not to mention rookie standouts Eric Patton and Larry Hefner. Carr is always a possibility for defensive end — if one of the new men can fill his boots at LBer.

With the departure of Capt. Willie Wood, the defensive backfield will have to be remade, although first choice Buchanon is considered a sure-fire bet to make it at one of the corners. Jim Hill was obtained from the Chargers for Lionel Aldridge and this hard-hitter is considered a good bet to work in Wood's safety spot. Ken Ellis likely will work the other corner and Al Matthews, Al Randolph and Doug Hart will likely fight it out for the other safety job.

Devine not only selected a kicking specialist, he appointed a man to handle the special teams, one Hank Kuhlmann, onetime aide to Devine at Missouri. Devine was unhappy with the work of the Pack's special teams in 1971 — not to mention the confusion, and it will be Kuhlmann's job to turn the special teams into an integral part of the Packers' scoring or defense against the foes' attempt at scoring.

Marcol, the native of Poland who astounded the college world with his soccer-style kicking at Hillsdale, has the stuff to become the greatest of Packer kickers.

The Packers have been kicking-poor since Don Chandler quit after the 1967 season. After Chandler the Packers tried nine different kickers, including Tim Webster, who finished off well last year and who will give it another try in 1972.

And there you are . . . The new identity will be noticeable right from the start of the 1972 season —when Marcol side-foots the opening kickoff.

I'M CERTAINLY NOT DISCOURAGED

By LEE REMMEL
Green Bay Press-Gazette

For one of the few times during the bizarre 1971 season, in which more than a modicum of trauma still lay ahead, Daniel John Devine was able to indulge in the luxury of a post-game smile.

The Packers, abruptly recuperating from a swoon which dissipated a 10-point lead, had profited from surprising largesse on the part of Paul Brown that benevolent October afternoon. The Master's fourth down, "go-for-it" decision from point-blank, field goal range had been converted into a decisive Willie Wood tackle, preserving a 20-17 victory and contributing substantially to Devine's good humor.

His cast-encased left leg gingerly extended across the seat of a convenient chair, he was holding easy, relaxed court for reporters in his dressing room office at Lambeau Field between sips of a soft drink.

"We'd much rather win than lose, of course, but I'd just as soon do it easier than that," he jested. "It's sort of the story of my life. I very seldom get to do it the easy way."

Already having been beset by the training camp loss of veteran quarterback Bart Starr via surgery, a broken leg on opening day and a bout with food poisoning, just a few of the tribulations which had compounded his transition from the University of Missouri campus to the National Football League, Devine had reason to be ironic.

And that, it should be recorded, was before the Packers had outplayed the redoubtable Minnesota Vikings more roundly than they had even been maltreated during a four-year reign as Central Division champions, then had fallen victim to the Norsemen 3-0 as the result of Charlie West's fourth quarter goal line interception of a Scott Hunter pass.

That Wonderful Year 1971? . . . Hardly. "It was kind of like a nightmare," Devine now concedes in forthright reflection. DD, whose left leg had been shattered in five places when he was accidentally prostrated along the sidelines by the Giants' Bob Hyland, quietly added, "I'd just as soon forget it.

"It had to be the most frustrating year I've put in, I guess, and the most disappointing (his first Packer team was 4-8-2). But still," he assured, setting his jaw, "I'm certainly not discouraged. I've always analyzed myself as one who fought a little harder the tougher things got."

During that interminable '71 season, and particularly throughout his nine-week recuperation from the injury, the doughty little Irishman long since had documented this off-the-cuff appraisal. Though intimates and his fellow coaches knew it had to be otherwise, he consistently dismissed the suggestion he was in pain. But he now admits that it was both persistent and considerable.

"The big thing about the broken leg, though, is the point Al McGuire made," Devine says. "We had a chat about coaching with an injury and he told me about a time that he had a severed Achilles tendon one year. He was talking about being at one end of the basketball court during practice and not being able to get to the other end, and how tough it was to coach under those circumstances.

"And I'll have to admit that, just to walk across the field last fall, probably took 10 times as much energy as it did for anyone else. It was just the frustration of not being able to be on top of everything.

"I don't always say a lot at practice — it varies from day to day and week to week—but I've always been on top of everything going on out on the field."

Devine takes quite pride in the knowledge he did not miss a game, despite the extent of his injury and the attendant lack of mobility. "In fact, I don't think I missed a practice," says the former Arizona State headmaster, who directed the Packers to a 34-13 victory over the Denver Broncos from the Milwaukee County Stadium pressbox the week following that ill-fated fourth quarter against the Giants.

"As I said, the inconvenience was as much pain as the pain itself, although there's no denying it was there. I tried to stay away from medication as much as possible. I don't know if it would have had any adverse affect but, just on the chance that it might have affected my alertness, I tried to stay away from it."

Devine is convinced his incapacity had no untoward effect upon his team's psyche. "I don't think it affected them, I really don't. Our pre-season games—before this all happened — were indicative of our lack of real fundamental disciplines. The same weaknesses that were obvious in the pre-season were obvious during the regular season.

"As I look back on the year, I might add, the explanation that I, as a new coach coming in, did not know the players well and that type of thing was all window dressing. As I review the film of all our 20 games of last season, I have absolutely the same reaction I had after seeing the team for the first time during our spring camp in Arlington, Texas.

"I had seen better overall scrimmages, many, many better ones, while I was a college coach. Better blocking, better tackling — not by everybody, but overall. Just like our day-before-a-game practice procedure last year—it was virtually worthless. If we played a preseason game on Saturday, for example, our Friday practice was worthless."

A trace of impatience in his tone as a painful memory returned, he underscored his point. "We ended the practice by having the placekicker kick the ball into the seat of a player's pants.

"I could take that for about two or three weeks," said Devine, as painstaking in his on-the-field attention to detail and discipline as he is in his dress, invariably impeccable. "But when I saw how bad our kicking game was, that was the end of that."

Typically, Devine does not exempt himself in assessing the causes of the Packers' trials during '71. He began a searching self-analysis by asserting, "I don't know when I've had a more cohesive staff than this one we've assembled for 1972. I really feel this staff works together extremely well.

"I suppose I'm reflecting on last year's but I don't mean to do that. I just think that I myself am going to do a better job of coaching. I always felt the best job of coaching I ever did was my first year in college at Arizona State in 1955. That really was the big change — from being an assistant (at Michigan State) to head coach. The second best job I did was my first year at Missouri.

"I don't feel that way about last year," he candidly confided. "But I feel my best job ever will be coming up this year. I don't feel like I did a very good job last year. But I feel now that I'm capable of doing a good job.

"In college, both of those years that I did my best coaching my teams were very young teams and went on to go undefeated as seniors. I had 120 out for football in the spring at Missouri — and invited back 47 in the fall. I just ran off the group who didn't think the way I did.

"I guess what I'm saying is that, eventually, you have to get people who think like you. When you inherit a team, you're going to convert a few and there are a few who aren't going to be converted.

"I'm not knocking the guys who are gone, not in the least, but I think we've made progress in conversions," he volunteered, exhibiting a smile as the religious character of his assessment struck him. "I really sense that the squad wants to be cooperative—that they want to do what the coaches want them to do and are going to do it to the very best of their ability."

Possessor of a glossy .740 career winning percentage upon arrival in Titletown, Devine has determined the best way to do his best job is to be himself. "I'm going to coach the way I did for the 22 years before coming to Green Bay," he says. "When I'm convinced in my own mind it's the right way to practice, or the right way to do it, we're going to do it that way. And I'm going to be wrong some of the time.

"But I'm not going to take the sit-back and look-see attitude I did last year which, I might add, I'm glad that I did. I don't know if there is any other way it could have been done if Tom Landry had come in here. Of course, he might have known the personnel better."

"THAT 4-8-2 RECORD EATS AT ME MORE THAN I CAN SAY"
— DAN DEVINE

That situation, obviously, no longer applies. And, encouraged by the potential he discerns, Devine is confident there will be a marked increase in the green and gold's artistry, both specific and general.

Despite his enthusiasm over a revamped coaching staff and the strong conviction he will be a more effective overseer of the Packers' field operations, as well as the promise of improved performance afield, Devine is realistically aware the record could be little better than it was in '71.

With five of last year's eight playoff teams on the agenda, not to mention the Oakland Raiders and Detroit Lions, he and his Packers will be facing perhaps the most taxing schedule in the team's 53-year history.

But Devine, a winner ever since he was voted the University of Minnesota-Duluth's most valuable senior athlete back in 1946, is not easily intimidated.

"The only way we can do something about last year is to start playing this year," he grimly reasons. "That 4-8-2 record eats at me more than I can say. More than anyone knows."

JOHN BROCKINGTON

By TERRY BLEDSOE
The Milwaukee Journal

John Brockington insists he's a peaceable man at heart. Sure, and Attila the Hun played hopscotch.

But Brockington insists he means it. "I'm not looking to run over people unless I have to," he said. "You can't last long in this league if you play like that. They're too big."

Brockington has the speed to flee from trouble, certainly, and a center of gravity so low it sometimes seems subterranean. But most of the National Football League will be surprised to learn that he spent his rookie season with the Green Bay Packers trying to avoid collision, for it was sudden encounters with Brockington that made the greatest impression — not to say dents — on his opponents.

For instance:

Bud Grant, coach of the Minnesota Vikings: "He makes a lot of his own yards by bouncing off people."

Ron Smith, Chicago Bears' defensive back: "I made him commit himself and then I tried to get low on him.

"Well, he drove into me with all his 225 pounds, and he'd gotten up momentum for about 15 yards. Boy, he brings his legs up beautifully. I think he got me in the chest with a leg, and it hurt."

Bill Bergey, Cincinnati Bengals linebacker: "In the films he looked like a slashing type of runner, but he powered you, too. One time I made a grab for him and he was like a big, slippery fish."

A trophy fish, then. For when Brockington had finished his autumn of blitzkrieg, he owned the National Football League record for most yards by a rookie, 1,105, he was a near unanimous choice as the league's rookie of the year (a dissenter was General Manager Upton Bell of New England, who opted for his quarterback, Jim Plunkett), and—almost overnight — the premier power runner in football.

"He'll be better his second year, though," said Packer Coach Dan Devine, a dismal prospect for the opposition.

"John has run pretty well" — a lovely piece of understatement, rather like Noah leaning out of the ark and commenting that it looks like rain — "but he has made mistakes in other facets of the game.

"It was like he and Scott Hunter (the equally green quarterback) were in the fall of their freshman year. Before they'd play a college game they'd have had a year of freshman ball, spring practice and fall practice. Here they were just thrust into it."

But the freshmen have become sophomores now, and Brockington's role as custodian of Green Bay's ground game is firmly established. Donny Anderson, the unhappy incumbent, was dealt to St. Louis for MacArthur Lane, in considerable measure because Devine and his coaches had decided that Brockington would be doing the running, and they could profitably employ somebody to do the blocking.

And that may not be the only change. "Normally, the fullback doesn't get as much of a shot carrying the ball as a halfback," Devine said. "But we're going to put in more fullback plays for John. And don't be surprised if you see him back with Dave Hampton on kickoff returns."

Brockington in an open field is a special sort of treat, but Brockington inside was the sight pro football grew most used to. Incredibly, he had not run an end sweep since he left high school in Brooklyn, N. Y., until he got to the College All-Star camp.

His college coach, Woody Hayes of Ohio State, did not subscribe to such tomfoolery, and so Brockington launched himself, again and again, at no sharper angle than the opposing tackles.

"But I always liked to run outside, and I knew I could," he said.

He proved that quickly, and proved also that once he got free, few linebackers could run him down — and often those who did would get a knee in the head for their trouble. "I've always run hard, and my knees have been high since I was in high school. You might as well run fast; you're going to get hit anyway, so why not get hit running fast?

And run Brockington did. He churned toward his 1,000 yards like any good runner—with changes of speed and velocity — but his progress was steady.

Steady, that is, except in one memorable period in midseason, when he ripped the defensive minded Central Division apart. He slashed through the Detroit Lions for 111 yards, cut the Chicago Bears up for 142 and — the piece de resistance — hammered the mighty Minnesota Vikings for 149 yards. In three games he had gained 402 yards, and from then on the 1,000 yard mark was a clear target.

That may not have been a totally good thing. That outburst against the Vikings occurred in the ninth game of the season; from then until Brockington at last achieved the plateau, against the Bears in the 13th game, the pressure mounted steadily and Brockington's concentration to what Devine called "the other facets" waned.

But that pace was too fast for even a Brockington to maintain, and even when he tapered off he gobbled yards faster than most of the other backs in pro football. With 349 yards in his first six games and 403 in those remarkable three, Brockington gained 354 yards in his last five games — and carried only 79 times, after 69 carries in his three big games alone.

The reasons were several. The return of Bart Starr as the Packer quarterback, with the need for aerial experiment that entailed, shifted the emphasis away from running as the season moved toward its conclusion, and so did the won-lost record. Green Bay won but one of its last five games, and the punishing patience of land attack often had to be abandoned in the interests of quick passing thrusts.

"I wouldn't even have known that if you hadn't told me," Devine said. "I didn't realize he hadn't carried the ball as much toward the end of the year."

But Devine may be counted upon to make sure Brockington is kept busy in the season ahead. For he knows now what he only suspected a year ago, that in the big Buckeye he has a talent which is encountered only infrequently.

Devine was chary of committing himself too wholeheartedly to the chorus of praise for Brockington when the runner was a rookie — but others were not.

"He's as hard a running back as I've ever seen," said guard Bill Lueck. "An arm tackle just won't slow him down at all, and the speed he has for his size is just amazing.

"You get a runner like that and you see him breaking his back, and it's embarrassing if you miss your block, really embarrassing."

The dimension Brockington added to Green Bay's running game earned new respect for the Packers' young offensive line, and the intensity of the line's good wishes surprised even Brockington. "I didn't realize they'd be that excited about me getting 1,000 yards," he said. "They're a good group."

Said Lueck, "It's one of the things we like to shoot for. It's kind of a feather in our caps, too."

Lueck and his colleagues—Dick Himes and Francis Peay at tackle, all-pro Gale Gillingham at guard and the dependable Ken Bowman at center — did retrieve some of the recognition they had lost in the years when an absence of a passing threat allowed opponents to choke off Packer runners, and Brockington was the catalyst.

And now, with a new season ahead, Brockington and his linemen will be far better armed to make further strides. There will be no breakin period this time around, no delay in acquaintanceship forced by the All-Star game.

Brockington and Co. will be able to start in high gear, and travel as far as his legs and their blocks can go.

"This time, he'll know how Carl Eller and Gary Larsen and Alan Page (of the Vikings) will play, first hand, and he'll be much more effective," Devine predicted.

That should be something to see.

MacARTHUR LANE a love of hitting

MacARTHUR LANE STARTS TO HURDLE CARDINAL AND FALCON LINES TO SCORE TOUCHDOWN IN 1971.

By MIKE O'BRIEN
The Associated Press

Muscular MacArthur Lane, expected to be a major figure in the Packers' already productive rushing game, never has had trouble making his presence felt on a football field.

Fan identification, however, sometimes has been a problem.

In 1967, college's football's top rusher and most publicized player was USC's O. J. Simpson, everybody's All-American. The No. 2 rusher, until he got hurt and missed the last four games, was Lane, with 627 yards and a 6.5 yard average for Utah State.

That failed to make Lane a household name, except among pro scouts and devotees of parlor sports trivia games. The scouts, though, saw unlimited potential in the 6-foot-1, 220-pound specimen with 4.6 second speed in the 40 and the Cardinals drafted him No. 1.

But partly because of injuries, Lane carried the ball only 48 times in his first two pro seasons and faded into obscurity again.

Then unexpectedly — to most people — he shot to stardom in 1970, rushing for 977 yards and a 4.7 average and scoring 13 touchdowns. One touchdown came on a 75 yard bolt from scrimmage, another on a 78 yard pass play.

At last, Lane not only had established himself but was a sensation by midseason. Still, Sports Illustrated sought to point out his underpublicized past by wryly alluding to Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

"A popular gag around the league when the Cards roll into town is to suggest that MacArthur Lane is a country road where a lot of Birchers live," the magazine wrote.

Then, with startling suddenness last February, Lane became a Packer. The price: Donny Anderson, even up.

Now, almost everyone in Packerland had a few questions:

"Is that all? For Donny Anderson? Which MacArthur Lane—the one who had the big season in 1970, or the one with the not-so-big season in 1971?"

Controversy perhaps was inevitable, for it not only was a straight exchange of running backs but in Anderson involved a man accorded star billing here from the day Vince Lombardi drafted him No. 1 as a future in 1964 and signed him for a reported $600,000 the next year. Anderson, Hollywood-blond and Texas-handsome, was to be the Golden Palomino, the next Paul Hornung.

To some, Anderson never quite lived up to it all, but his six-year statistics need no apologies. He left as the club's fifth all-time rusher with 787 carries for 3,165 yards, a 4.0 average, and added 125 pass receptions for 1,725 yards. His 186 points (31 touchdowns) ranks him 15th in club history.

But if Anderson is one of the best all-purpose backs in the NFL, so, too, is Lane. The figures tell part of the story — 1,736 career yards rushing for a 4.2 average and 61 pass receptions the past two years for 663 yards.

"He's a good sweep runner and an excellent receiver, so he can go both ways from the halfback positions," says the man who brought him here, Coach Dan Devine.

What the figures don't show is Lane's excellence as a blocker, a skill Devine considers paramount in a backfield which includes John Brockington, most prolific rookie rusher in NFL history last season with 1,105 yards.

"Before we played the Cardinals last December, we made up a film of MacArthur Lane and Johnny Roland blocking," Devine said. "We felt they were the two best blockers we faced all year.

"Lane is a devastating blocker, what a guy like Brockington really needs. Your short side attack has got to be good."

Lane has that quality coaches crave in a player—a love of hitting — and he has paid his dues. He learned hitting in the trenches, for he began his college career as a linebacker.

But Devine clearly envisions Lane as much more than a blocker for Brockington. Lane himself chose his words with care when asked his thoughts about teaming with one of the finest power runners to enter the league in years.

"I'm looking forward to playing football," he said. "I don't want to single him out in front of everybody. It takes 11 guys to play this game."

MacARTHUR LANE

Also not lost on Devine is that, of the Packers' eight defeats last year, four were by a total of just 15 points. Green Bay had 24 passes intercepted and lost 23 fumbles in 1971 — 47 mistakes which cost chances to score and gave the ball to the enemy. Just a few more sustained drives could have changed the outcome of those four games and the Packers would have finished 8-4-2, rather than 4-8-2.

With Lane and Brockington, the Packers would be nearly fumble-proof at the setback positions if both approach their records. Research by Chuck Lane, the team's public relations director, shows Lane has fumbled only 1.3 per cent of the time he has handled the ball as a pro. Brockington was almost as sure-handed last year, with a fumble ratio of only 1.7 per cent. Anderson, the figures show, had a 3.2 per cent figure.

Lane shared Devine's enthusiasm about the trade, for 1971 is a season he would prefer to forget.

"I have my mind set on 1,500 yards," he had said a year ago after his big 1970 season. "I want to lead the league in rushing and scoring. I want to make all-pro. And I want to play in the Super Bowl."

Instead, his rushing total tailed off from 977 yards the year before to 592, and a disappointing season ended on a bitter note after he publicly criticized Cardinal Vice President Bill Bidwill in December. A story quoted Lane as saying of the portly Bidwill: "All his money's right there in his stomach."

"I flew off the handle and I'm sorry," he said afterward. "The whole damn season has been so frustrating. When I saw him after we had lost, I spoke without thinking. What I said was in a rage of anger."

Lane attributes his decline in rushing yardage to a change in emphasis in the Cardinal playbook.

"I think it resulted from the type of offense we were running last year," he said. "We had tighter splits in the line designed to improve the passing game and it didn't help our running attack at all."

Devine likewise is hoping to improve Green Bay's passing game, but hardly at the expense of a ground attack which easily is the club's strength. The Packers ran 501 times from scrimmage last year, compared with 254 passing attempts, and averaged 4.5 yards per rush.

The Packer ground game, model '72, won't erase the memory of Hornung and Jim Taylor, for champhionship years aren't forgotten. But with the proven and versatile Lane added to a backfield that includes Brockington, the explosive Dave Hampton, veterans Perry Williams and Larry Krause and perhaps one or more of several promising rookies, the Packers appear to have the basis for the sound ball control style that is a proven winner.

STEAL OF THE YEAR

By LEE REMMEL
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Soothed by time's healing properties, the Indians may now have mellowed about Manhattan Island.

But it is doubtful if the Denver Broncos are ready to forgive the Packers for some latter day larceny of similarly imposing proportions, even if they did bring it upon themselves.

Desperate for an experienced quarterback as the National Football League's draft neared in January of 1971, the Coloradans began exploring the trade market with uncommon diligence. The Packers, equally desperate, just happened to be casting about for a premier pass rusher at that precise moment.

The Packers gave up the services of Don Horn, a somewhat temperamental type who was subsequently plagued with inconsistency and injury during the '71 season in behalf of the Broncos. In return, they acquired Denver's position in the first round of the draft plus Alden Roche, a fearsome Louisianan with an unquenchable yen for combat.

The draft switch moved Green Bay ahead of the neighboring Bears, likewise reported to be zeroing in on the Ohio State campus, at that critical stage and produced John Brockington, the big, bulldozing fullback.

However they may differ on other aspects, both parties to the trade are in accord on one point. If Brockington was the Rookie of the Year after rushing for 1,105 yards and a new NFL record for yearlings, the relentless Roche had to be the Steal of the Year.

So obtrusive was the tireless young perfectionist in pursuit of enemy quarterbacks that the more knowledgeable of the faithful have been likening his acquisition to the trades which yielded Henry Jordan and Willie Davis, both spectacular bargains.

Jordan, who came to Green Bay from the Cleveland Browns in 1959 for a fourth round draft choice, and Davis, acquired in exchange for obscure receiver A. D. Williams in 1960, lingered in green and gold for a decade of stardom — and five world championships.

"ROCHE'S A SMART FOOTBALL PLAYER AND ALWAYS ALERT"
— COACH DAVE HANNER

Roche's coach, canny Dave Hanner, readily accepts the comparison. Though an arch conservative, the Packers' newly named defensive coordinator is not only convinced the bushy-haired Southern University product is hewn from the Jordan-Davis mould but is counting upon him to spearhead a 1972 regrouping of the Green Bay front four. That largely youthful unit produced only 19 quarterback traps over the 14-game route last season, an anemic performance.

"Alden is a better football player at this stage than Willie was in his second year, I would say," Hanner volunteered. "Whether he has quite the quickness Willie did, I'm not sure at this point, but confidence and playing will have a lot to do with that aspect. I do know he's stronger than Willie.

"Of course, we haven't asked him to do some of the things Willie did for us. But," and a sly smile lit Hanner's ruddy features, "we will this year. I personally believe you can throw too much at a young player. He's going to learn more playing than you can teach him. You can throw too much at him on film before he gets the experience to make use of it. And I didn't want that to happen with Roche."

A shrewd and dedicated performer himself during a 13-year career in the Packer front four, Hanner is impressed by Roche's all-out approach to the game. "He's a smart football player and always alert," says Hanner, paying Roche his ultimate tribute. "He pays attention and you only have to tell him one time. Then he'll go out on his own and work on it. And he'll do it as near to the way you want it to be done as he can.

"Alden also is a great hustler — he's always hustling. He's a guy you can depend on. You know what kind of an effort you're going to get from him on every play. He has a great attitude."

Shrugging off his customary coachly caution, Hanner asserted, "Roche's future is all ahead of him. He has everything to be a real good one. It's hard to say if he'll be a great one in his second year in the league, but I believe he will.

"And he has the potential to be a team leader, too. He's not a guy who does a lot of talking. But he's not silent either. He gets in there and talks things over with the other people on defense.

"Of course, I think any player on defense is only as good as the guy he's playing alongside of," the tobacco-chewing Arkansan philosophized. "You can't have individuals on defense — it has to be a team defense. But Roche could be every bit as valuable to us as Davis and Jordan were."

Roche's presumably improved presence is not Hanner's only hope for a more artistic front four in '72. He also sees markedly better days ahead for the elder statesman of that quartet, Robert Eddie Brown, even though the mountainous Arkansas A. M. & N. alumnus was the victim of a shooting incident last March, when a bullet entered his neck beneath the right ear and emerged through his left cheek.

"That shouldn't hurt him," Hanner says, appending with an apologetic chuckle, "I hate to say it, but Bob looks better now than he ever did in the past. His weight is down and he looks to be in good shape.

"And as far as the shooting doing any damage or affecting his playing, there should be no problem at all. His doctor says it should never be any factor in his play."

As in the past, Robert Eddie's motivation is his immediate superior's primary concern. "Bob is as good as he wants to be," Hanner contends. "Strength-wise, he can compete with most people in the league. And he has the quickness.

"In the last few years, he's made more big plays than any other man in our front four. Of course, he's older and more experienced and should be making more big plays. But Bob has all-pro potential. As I said, he can be as good as he wants to be. It's my job to make up his mind to do the job.

"One thing that could be a help is that he's going to be pushed more this year than he has been in the past—we have more people to push him for a job.

"Bob could be one of the top two or three tackles in pro football if he'd go every down like he goes one or two out of every four plays. I think he realizes that he's getting to an age (32) where he has to do that. I think he knows he has to perform every play or time will pass him up."

Hanner is equally optimistic about the Packer future of Mike McCoy, although he tacitly concedes the monolithic Notre Dame grad has not been the instant super-star the pundits freely predicted he would be.

His coach suggests there have been extenuating circumstances. "Mike was coming along real well last year until he injured a knee on the first play of our first regular season game," he contends. "He's a guy who makes a lot of big plays. And you couldn't ask for anyone to hustle any more or for anyone with any better attitude.

Hanner feels the shedding of suet, at his off-season direction, will measurably enhance McCoy's chances of fulfilling his potential. "Mike's going to play 10 pounds lighter this year, at 265, and he's going to work on his pass rush.

"All he has to do is get experience. I know he can rush the passer. Experience is going to make him more consistent. He's too good an athlete not to be a topflight football player. What he has to do is concentrate on his techniques. He does them well for a time, then seems to forget about it. But he's played pretty well the last two years, considering that in college he was never asked to rush the passer. He just had to get in the flow and play the run. That was his only assignment at Notre Dame."

Hanner describes elongated Clarence Williams, the other potential member of his front four, as deceptive. "Clarence has the size," he says, "and his speed will fool you . . . he's strong for a guy his size and build, and quicker than he appears to be.

JIM DELISLE GETS READY TO GREET RAMS' ROMAN GABRIEL.

"Clarence has made some good plays for us. Again, like McCoy, he needs experience. We may work him some inside at tackle this year. We don't know if he can play there, but we're going to try him and find out."

The Packers' rosy-cheeked defense chief admits that sophomore Donnell Smith, another contender for employment up front, is something of an enigma at this point. But he is hopeful.

"Smith has all the tools—quickness, strength and size — to be a fine defensive end," he says without qualification. "But, whether he wants it bad enough to stick his nose in there, we'll find out. He's got to want it bad enough."

Analyzing a sharply contrasting case, that of Smith's fellow sophomore, Jim DeLisle, Hanner termed the one-time University of Wisconsin walk-on "one of the hardest workers on the entire ball club last year."

"Jim has good techniques and he's going to improve when he gets a little more experience. I hope he'll also get a little stronger, which I'm sure he will with maturity. Jim rushed the passer real well last season for as little as he played."

Perhaps afraid to put his hopes into words, for fear he might cast a hex upon his prize prospect, the five time former all-pro is restrained in his appraisal of freshman Dave Pureifory, the cat-quick Eastern Michigan product who created a major stir during the Packers' first rookie camp of the year in Arizona.

"Judging by his practices at Phoenix, the attitude and effort he gave there," Hanner cautiously observed, "and assuming he has the same effort and the same attitude, he could be the guy to push all four starters. He could play inside or outside, but we'll try to start him on the outside.

"Pureifory has the quickness and speed (4.5 in the 40), and he's a good looking athlete. He showed us enough down there in Arizona so that we could trade Lionel Aldridge with the confidence that it wouldn't hurt us that much."

Though acutely aware the '72 task is formidable, with five of last year's eight playoff teams looming on a demanding schedule, Hanner pronounces himself optimistic over the prospects for an abrupt turnabout by his shock troops.

the linebackers NO SOFT SPOTS

By BUD LEA
Milwaukee Sentinel

The three. The linebackers. They were unexcelled.

Ray Nitschke, who grew more immortal with each falling hair, was a master at unhinging anything that came his way. Dave Robinson, a super athlete, had the speed of the pass-catching end he was in college and the reactions of a piranha. Lee Roy Caffey was a big, tough belter just waiting to slug the first guy who came his way.

Five years ago the Green Bay trio of Nitschke, Robinson, and Caffey represented the best set of linebackers in professional football. They were one of the big reasons the Packers' defense was consistently the best.

Two years ago a 6-foot-5, 235 pound acrobat named Fred Carr was a one man destroyer in a preseason game in Oakland, Calif. Replacing Caffey, who was traded to Chicago, Carr intercepted two passes and returned a fumble for a touchdown in the Packers' 37-7 victory over the Raiders and Caffey became a memory.

Two months later on California soil Dave Robinson, an unquestioned all-pro, was cut down by an Achilles tendon injury in San Diego and a brilliant career was in jeopardy. A rookie named Jim Carter, who had never before played on defense, was thrust into a starting assignment at midseason.

Last summer the painful phasing out of Ray Nitschke began in training camp when Carter, young, bold, confident . . . especially confident, was moved to the middle.

Last year was a learning season and one of trial and error for Carter. It was another year of frustration for Robinson, who started the season handicapped with a broken wrist and later crippled with a shoulder injury. And 1971 was another step up for Carr, one of the real gifted athletes in the National Football League.

Defensively, the Packers' strong suit remains the linebackers. This year, being more knowledgeable working together and with a healthy Robinson, the linebacking should be improved.

Dave Hanner has been with the Packers since 1952. He was a five-time all-pro defensive tackle, joined Vince Lombardi's staff in 1965 and has been named coordinator of Green Bay's defense by Coach Dan Devine.

"We ask a lot from our linebackers, more so than other teams," Hanner said. "Even in the winning years, the linebackers were the key in defending against the run and pass. That's the way our defense is designed.

"Carter does not have the experience you'd like at middle linebacker. Of course, the only way to get it is to play. I believe Robinson and Carr are as good as any outside linebackers in the league. When Robinson is healthy no one is better. Robinson being injured however is a completely different story."

Dave Robinson majored in civil engineering at Penn State. He wanted to go directly into engineering before Green Bay started waving around those green dollar bills. "I think I was offered something like $7,000 a year to go into engineering," Dave recalled. "Heck, it would have taken me five years to get up to $12,000 a year as an engineer. The only way I saw of getting ahead was by playing pro ball."

When Robinson puts that analytical mind to work on the gridiron there's no room for doubt. "In preparing for a game, Dave will ask a lot of questions," Hanner said. "He's got to know exactly what we want done. No indecision. He's not going to make any mistakes. Those things made him the best outside linebacker a couple years ago when he was healthy."

How important is Robinson to the Packers? "He could change our whole season by having a good year," Hanner declared.

During the offseason Robinson works as a special representative in marketing for the Schlitz Brewing Co. in Milwaukee. It is the same company that gave former Packer star Willie Davis his start in the world of business and rewarded him a distributorship of his own in Los Angeles.

At the age of 31 and with his professional career in its twilight years, Robinson is thinking more of tomorrow than he did nine years ago when he reported to the Packers.

Hanner, however, believes Robinson has a quality that is instinctive, that all good linebackers have to have. That's leadership ability that stimulates a team.

Robinson sat behind his desk at Schlitz last spring and analyzed his 1971 season. Like most veterans, Robinson viewed the necessity of risking life and limb in exhibition games with distaste. He blamed an injury sustained in Buffalo for his subpar year.

"I was coming off that Achilles injury and pointing to Sept. 19, the opener," he remarked. "I didn't think I would be used much in our last exhibition game at Buffalo.

FRED CARR JUMPS WITH JOY AFTER PACKERS RECOVER FUMBLE.

Well, I ended up playing the whole game and breaking my wrist."

Robinson opened the season against the New York Giants with a cast on his right wrist. It hampered his tackling ability, so he adjusted and began to hit ballcarriers with his shoulder. Significantly, when his wrist healed he suffered a shoulder injury.

Healthy again, Robinson seems more committed to the game as he looks forward to his 10th season at Green Bay. "Last year the older players had to learn how to react with new personnel," he said. "After playing a year under Coach Devine I have a better understanding of what to expect. The determining factor in my returning to Green Bay, though, is that Coach Hanner will be in complete charge of the defense."

Fred Carr was the Packers' first draft choice in 1968. He got his first starting assignment in 1970 and proceeded to play his way into the starting lineup in the Pro Bowl alongside Dick Butkus. Carr was voted the game's outstanding defensive player. Last year Carr was not invited to the Pro Bowl, perhaps a mistake, but he had to be at peace with himself when he left Green Bay last December.

"Carr made more tackles than anybody on our club," Hanner disclosed. "He made some big plays, did a good job on pass coverage and as far as assignments were concerned, he didn't make many mistakes. If I were going to pick a guy who was our most valuable player on defense last year, it would be Freddie."

The Packers' 13th game of the season against the Chicago Bears in Lambeau Field was a case in point.

- As a member of the Packers' special teams, Carr put the Bears into a deep hole when he downed a Donny Anderson punt on the Chicago four yard line.
- As a starting outside linebacker, Carr's blitz against quarterback Kent Nix resulted into the interception by Carter that put the Bears on the skids in the second half.
- Back on the special teams, Carr all but destroyed the Bears' Gingerbread Man, Ron Smith, on a punt return. Smith lost the ball and Al Randolph recovered to set up Green Bay's fourth touchdown.
- In the fourth quarter Carr moved to left defensive end. When he broke through and hit Bobby Douglass so hard that he fumbled the ball away to Mike McCoy, the Packers' coaching staff found itself in sort of a dilemma.

Fred Carr: Outside linebacker or defensive end?

Hanner reveled at the idea of putting Freddie on the line and telling him, "go get the quarterback." On the other hand, Hanner can not afford to leave a hole in his linebacking corps.

"I'm a linebacker by trade," said Carr, "but if it comes down to a point where they feel that I would make a better defensive end than a linebacker, I'd give it some serious thought, and do the best thing.

ROOM FOR IMPROVEMENT

by GENE W. HINTZ
United Press International

Remember Willie Wood, Hank Gremminger, Jesse Whittenton and Herb Adderley? And Tom Brown, John Symank and Bob Jeter?

Sure you do. They—and current Packer Doug Hart — helped make Green Bay's defensive backfields the best in the National Football League in the 1960s.

Now it's a new decade and the cast, except for Hart, is new as Coach Dan Devine tries to build the Packers back to championship calibre.

The defense — and particularly the defensive backs—will be of extreme importance in any rebuilding, especially after a 1971 season that saw Green Bay's protection against the run impressive and its protection against the pass almost ludicrous at times.

Opponents scored 34 touchdowns against the Packers last season and 21 of them came through the air. Taken alone, the statistic could be interpreted as an indictment of Green Bay's secondary.

But there are other considerations.

- The Packers' pass rush a year ago was not the best. How many of the touchdowns through the air were attributable to the rush and how many to the defensive backs?
- Sixteen of those 21 aerial scores came in the first six games, only five came in the final eight as Devine started to see improvements in both the line and the secondary.

As the 1972 season opens, further improvement is expected and, to insure the new look changes have been made.

"I think we'll be a little bit better organized," said Dave Hanner, named during the off-season to coordinate the Green Bay defense.

"We should be better, too. I think Willie Buchanon is going to help a lot."

Buchanon is one of the two new faces in the Packers' secondary this year. He is expected to hold down a starting cornerback position and Devine is hoping he will have the same effect on the defense this year that John Brockington had on the offense a year ago.

The other new face is Jimmy Hill, acquired in the Lionel Aldridge trade with the San Diego Chargers. Hill, a starter since his rookie year, carries a reputation as a "hitter" into the season and he's expected to hold down the free safety job vacated by the retirement of Wood, a fixture in the Packers' backfield for a dozen years.

"He's an extremely aggressive back and an excellent hitter," Devine said.

Returning this year, along with Hart, are such promising youngsters as Ken Ellis, Al Matthews, Charlie Hall and Butch Davis and Al Randolph, acquired from San Francisco a year ago after a five year career—most of it as a starter.

"I know we're going to miss Willie Wood back there," Hanner says. "His knowledge and leadership are gone."

But he's hoping the addition of the experienced Hill and general improvement in the young players will help offset the loss.

"There is room for improvement. Those people who have been in the league only a year or two certainly should improve," he said.

Ellis, one of those young players, agrees. A starter as a rookie, Ellis felt some improvement in his second season, but still would like more — particularly against the run.

"I think I can improve as far as forcing the play and shedding the blockers is concerned," he said.

Ellis has been especially adept at the interception and at making the big play — a knack that Adderley once exhibited with Green Bay.

His six interceptions last season led the Packers, but all six came in the first six games. After that, enemy quarterbacks seldom threw in his direction.

"I guess they got a little respect for me," he said. "Actually I would like for them to throw my way because it's a challenge. And, of course, you can get more interceptions."

Like Ellis, Buchanon has a reputation as a pick off artist.

Packer scouts rated him the top collegiate player in the nation last year. Almost every other team had him rated as at least the best defensive back.

In his senior year, 46 passes were thrown in his direction. His man caught 12, he caught five. The rest were either knocked to the ground or fell incomplete.

"He's better right now than a lot of people who are playing regular in the NFL," Hanner said shortly after Green Bay had selected the former San Diego State star.

"He's going to get his feet wet in a hurry," Devine said. "He'll learn more in there than he will on the bench."

Hill fits right into the Wood mold. Both players are known as hard tacklers and both are outstanding citizens off the field. In 1970, San Diego Jaycees named Hill as one of the area's five outstanding young men.

"It's going to make me work harder to be a better individual," Hill said of the honor. "I know there will be a lot of young people out there watching me. Maybe it will help them and I'm hoping it will help me.

"My intention is to play and do the best in whatever I do," he said. "Now I'm going to play for the Green Bay Packers."

Until the acquisition of Hill, Matthews had been listed as the top candidate for the free safety job. Now he'll be fighting with Hart, Hall and Randolph for either the strong safety job or a position at cornerback in place of Buchanon or Ellis.

"By listing him at free safety, we're certainly not eliminating him at cornerback or strong safety," Devine said.

"Al Matthews had the best game of all of our defensive backs in the last game of the season at Miami," he said. "And, he's got such a great attitude too."

Hart, a starter at both cornerback and safety on and off for several years, could face a strong challenge from both Matthews and Randolph to retain his regular status.

Randolph faced a period of adjustment last season after so many years with the 49ers. But defensive backfield coach Don Doll has been impressed with his attitude.

"He's been a very cooperative player," Doll said. "He also seems to be very knowledgeable. He's very alert."

Doll, Hanner and Devine face a tough task but all feel they have the material to build a strong defensive backfield.

NFL RULE OF THUMB... KEEP DEFENSIVE AVERAGE BELOW 20

There's a rule of thumb in the NFL:

The championship teams allow their opponents an average of less than 20 points per game.

The four conference finalists of 1971 offer a good example. Dallas permitted an average of 15.8 during the 1971 league season and Minnesota gave up only 9.9, a modern-day record. In the AFC, Miami's average was 12.4 and Kansas City's 14.8.

Ironically, of those four clubs, Dallas, with the largest defensive average, won Super Bowl VI. But the Cowboys had the most explosive offense to go with their tight defense.

The table below shows the Packers' defensive averages since 1940 and the figures reflect the club's good and lean years. The average was below 20, topped by a remarkable 10.5 in 1962, during the 1960s when the Packers won five championships.

The Packers' 1950s were noted for their wholesale permissions, including a 33.8 average in 1950 and 31.8 in 1958. The Bays stayed below "20" in eight of the 10 years in the 1940s. The game was largely controlled by the defenses and thus points allowed averages were generally below 15. The table follows:

HUNTER becomes a PRO

by LEN WAGNER
Green Bay Press-Gazette

It was right there for the whole nation to see, thanks to the television camera zooming in on the sidelines during the annual Coaches All-American game in June. Coach Charlie McClendon of LSU was in what has been politely called a "discussion" with his quarterback . . . one Scott Hunter.

The discussion was a rather furious one.

Packer Coach Dan Devine, who had a special interest in the game since Hunter loomed as his future quarterback, dryly noted later, "I understand Scott did a little coaching in that game."

In defense, Hunter acknowledged, "I got some bad publicity out of it but I was just giving the coach an alternative. I don't feel that I was trying to coach the team."

And Devine, continuing his analysis of the incident, asserted, "We intend to restrict his career to playing."

That was in June. The weeks flew by and Hunter became the Packer quarterback, assuming the regular role after Bart Starr bowed out because of injuries, Zeke Bratkowski was deftly set aside in the interests of age, Gary Lane became a white collar worker in the Packer office and Frank Patrick gave way in talent.

Soon it was Nov. 14 in Bloomington, Minn., and the suddenly insolent Packers, led by thunderbolt John Brockington, were physically thrashing the haughty Minnesota Vikings. But the scoreboard read 0-0 as the Packers repeatedly blew marvelous scoring opportunities.

And with only eight more minutes to tick away, the Packers found themselves with another superb chance. They were on the Viking 10-yard line, second and eight. Everybody had field goal in mind.

But Hunter faded to pass and pitched toward Rich McGeorge in the end zone . . . only to have Viking Charlie West intercept the misguided missile and scoot all the way to midfield before being knocked out of bounds. Two first downs later, Viking kicker Fred Cox toed a 25-yard field goal and the Packers . . . who outgained the Vikes 301 yards to 87 . . . bowed 3-0.

There seemed little question but what Hunter had reverted to "coaching."

Devine, revealing some understandable frustration, declared, "He was on his own . . . but on the sidelines I had just been saying for about five minutes that a field goal would win the game. Everybody knew my feelings."

Hunter was subdued but candid as he volunteered, "I got greedy. I wanted seven instead of three. We were trying to play for three but I just got greedy."

Perhaps because of the significance of that singular interception in a season where interceptions regularly plagued the former Alabama whiz, that incident has stuck in the minds of Packer fans.

It will not be easy for Hunter to overcome that nagging memorial to his rookie season. Nor will it be easy to overcome the fact that he had an interception percentage of 10.4 for the season, by far the highest of all regular signalists in the NFL.

BART STARR STRIKES HIS CLASSIC PASSING POSE IN FIRST START IN 1971 AGAINST SAINTS NOV. 28 AFTER RECOVERING FROM SURGERY.

But the key word in that paragraph is "regular." Hunter, drafted in the sixth round, far behind the ballyhooed Jim Plunkett, Don Pastorini and Lynn Dickey, was a regular and established himself as a pro quarterback.

That is not to say he won't have a difficult time establishing and maintaining himself as the No. 1 QB on the Packers. Veteran Bart Starr, if his presumably strengthened arm and shoulder holds up, will have considerable to say about who is Hertz and who is Avis. And another rookie, Jerry Tagge, the Green Bay native who proved so successful as the grid guide for the University of Nebraska's double national champions that he was a first round draftee, may have something to say.

But no matter what happens in that derby, Hunter has established himself as a pro, though his reputation is already tinged slightly with Bobby Layneitis.

In fact, his rookie record was somewhat better than Dickey, who shared the quarterbacking chores at Houston with Pastorini and veteran Charley Johnson.

And, in fact, Hunter's record of progress is one that should inspire a heap of hope for this and coming years.

Obviously, interceptions were his primary bugaboo. For the season, he suffered 17 interceptions in 163 launches. But break that down and you find that in his first six games, he had 10 of 69 passes intercepted, a whopping 14.5 percentage. In his last seven games (he didn't play in the finale against Miami), Scott had just seven interceptions in 94 attempts, a much more respectable, if not creditable, 7.4 per cent. In those first six games, his completion percentage was 45 per cent. In the final seven, it was 47 per cent.

While it may not be an entirely fair comparison, it is interesting that Hunter's figures for the last seven games are better than Pastorini's season-long figures.

If anyone is looking for further encouragement via statistical analysis, a peek at the record book shows that Hunter's first year, in which he finished 12th among NFC quarterbacks, was a brighter one than that of eventual star Tobin Rote.

For instance, Rote, back in his rookie season of 1950, had a 10.7 interception percentage, higher even than Hunter's and in an era where zone defenses were not yet baffling passers. And Rote's completion percentage was a mere 37.1 per cent, compared to Hunter's 46.0 per cent last fall.

Hunter also compares reasonably well with the first year effort of Vito (Babe) Parilli in 1952. Parilli had a 9.5 interception percentage and a 43.5 completion percentage.

Only Starr, among the latter day Packer rookie quarterbacks, enjoyed a really better first season than Hunter . . . and Starr was strictly part time in that 1956 season. Nevertheless, he hit 54.5 per cent of his passes and had an interception percentage of only 6.8.

It might be noted that part of Starr's low lifetime interception percentage has always been traced to his unwillingness to throw the ball if he sees any chance of a theft. He prefers to take a lump and a loss and try to make up for it on the next play or two.

Hunter, sporting agility as well as his sometimes misguided daring, was not afraid to throw the ball. As a result, he was caught behind the line only 10 times for 79 yards in the 13 games he played.

Whatever shortcomings Hunter did display in his initial season, one of them wasn't confidence. He radiates it to the point where some observers have compared it with Van Brocklinish brashness. He is certain his own ability will carry him to stardom. Asked if he were ready shortly before he was to make his starting bow in an exhibition game, he announced "I was ready last week." When he makes a mistake, he readily admits it but with a freshness that says it won't happen again.

Much of this confidence was born at the University of Alabama where Hunter broke a number of passing records established by Joe Namath. In his Crimson Tide career, he came up only 101 yards short of 5,000 yards while hitting 372 of 672 passes . . . 27 for touchdowns.

This confidence brims over to his teammates. Even the veterans on the Packers' relatively young club acknowledge Hunter's enthusiasm and leadership has caught their fancy. They like him and they feel sure he is a major leaguer. Much of what befell Hunter and the Packers last year, they pass off as unfortunate circumstances.

Some of this attitude blossomed quickly last September. Hunter was called on in relief of Bratkowski in the opening game of the season against the Giants, Sept. 19, in Lambeau Field. And though the Packers wound up losing, 42-40, largely through a fantastic series of those "unfortunate circumstances," Hunter connected on nine of 16 passes for 158 yards and two touchdowns.

It was an auspicious debut for the young man, who quickly became a fan favorite . . . only to fade in that capacity as the season wore on. Never again did he quite reach that level of spectacularity. For instance, in the first Viking game, Hunter hit 12 of 24 passes for a whopping 230 yards but three interceptions dimmed the effort. Against the Cardinals, he successfully pegged 13 of 23 passes but for only 129 yards and the Packers had to settle for a 16-16 tie with a last play field goal.

Nevertheless, with his trying rookie campaign behind him, with Starr on the far edge of his super career and Tagge still to face the mountain of pro problems, Scott Hunter stepped out of 1971 and into 1972 as THE Packer quarterback.

SWIFTLY IN PACKER
SPRING CAMP

THE THREE BEST

☐ Willie Buchanon
☐ Jerry Tagge
☐ Chester Marcol

By LEN WAGNER
Green Bay Press-Gazette

There are, at maximum, 24 positions on a football team, two full platoons plus a placement kicker and a punter. In reality, however, because many positions such as wide receiver, defensive line running back and others involve generally similar qualifications, the number of positions can logically be reduced to 14.

And there are 26 teams in the National Football League.

Thus, when one team is able to acquire the very best player in each of three positions in the college draft, it must be considered a bountiful harvest.

The Packers did just that. Take the word of envious Tom Braatz, personnel director of the Atlanta Falcons, for it.

"I know the top three they picked better than the others," he said of Green Bay's college crop, "and they got the best football player in the country in each category. They got the best quarterback, the best kicker and the best defensive corner. They are super picks."

Other NFL observers across the country, including sportswriters on both coasts, agreed.

Who are the three?

No. 1, Willie Buchanon, who for most of the college season was largely unknown to fans outside of California, where he toiled in the San Diego State defensive backfield. He was lost in the glare of more publicized defenders primarily because his opponents knew him too well and refused to have anything to do with his turf, thereby depriving him of the opportunity to display his considerable talent.

JERRY TAGGE'S "A REAL WINNER"

But then came the East-West Shrine game on national television and Willie Buchanon came up with three interceptions and the most valuable player award.

Suddenly everybody knew about Willie Buchanon and the fact that he had allowed just one touchdown in his two years with the Aztecs . . . and that only because his opponent escaped while Willie was accidentally colliding with an official.

One pro scout working for the CEPO combine blatantly labeled him "the best college cornerback I have ever scouted."

And when the Packers held a spring camp at Scottsdale, Ariz., defensive backfield coach Don Doll used a composite film of Buchanon's play for San Diego as a training device for other young defensive backs.

No. 2, Jerry Tagge, of whom a Packer scout said during the fall of 1971, "He's not as fast as we would like a quarterback to be . . . he's not very quick on his feet in setting up . . . he doesn't have a quick release . . . and he doesn't have a great arm but he's a winner. He's a heckuva engineer and if I had a business, he's the kind of guy I would want to run it for me."

The latter part of that appraisal referred to the fact that Tagge had quarterbacked the University of Nebraska to the national championship in 1970 and was en route to doing the same thing in 1971 when the scout offered his description.

And in spite of the scout's conclusions about his physical abilities, Tagge connected on 154 of 258 passing attempts in 1971. That's a rather commendable 59.7 per cent and good for 2,178 yards and 17 touchdowns. He also ran for 330 yards and scored nine touchdowns. But perhaps the most glittering statistic of all is that he had only four of those 258 passing attempts intercepted.

Packer Coach Dan Devine, very aware of Tagge's talent since he had been victimized by it as a coach at the University of Missouri, studied the national champions' signalist on film, compared him to other quarterbacks such as Heisman Trophy winner Pat Sullivan of Auburn and concluded "He's my kind of player."

No. 3, Chester Marcol carried perhaps the biggest bag of ballyhoo of any kicker into the Packer spring camp and promptly hit the upright on his first two attempts, triggering a wry groan from some observers who have watched kickers don and doff Packers uniforms with the regularity of day and night the past several years.

But Marcol finished up that first session by smoothing out his nerves and his soccer swing and socking three straight through the target from 47 yards away. The next day, he shot three straight between the sticks from 52 yards away.

And that performance was more in keeping with the reputation the Polish-born toe had established at little Hillsdale College, where in 1971 he was successful on a deceptive nine of 20 field goal attempts. From 47 yards or less, he was successful on nine of 11 attempts with a median kick of 37 yards. Additionally, he made 28 of 29 extra points, which are the equivalent of 20 yard field goals in pro football.

Devine, frustrated by the lack of a dependable kicker in his first Packer season, took a look at Marcol and his statistics and promptly announced, "He's going to kick the first kickoff of the season, the first field goal or the first extra point, whatever it is."

WILLIE BUCHANON — "A JOHN BROCKINGTON SITUATION"

How were the Packers able to land this bonanza of collegiate talent in competition with the other 25 teams?

A combination of circumstances based on what primary needs faced the other teams, what major requirements the Packers felt, a rather astute trade and some good fortune.

Walt Patulski was generally conceded to be the first pick and it's possible the Packers might have snatched him in the first round had the Notre Dame defensive roughneck, considered a fearsome pass rusher, been available. The Packers needed a pass rusher but Buffalo did the expected and tabbed the Irish star.

The Packers' next biggest need was in the defensive backfield and Buchanon was somewhat surprisingly available when Green Bay's turn came around. Devine had made it clear earlier that Willie was high on his list, noting with a wink, "I was hoping Buchanon wouldn't look as good as he has."

Thus, Buchanon became the seventh player selected in the annual plucking process. And after three more players were tabbed, it was the Packers' turn again, thanks to a pre-season trade that had sent Kevin Hardy to San Diego in return for the Chargers' first pick.

That deal delighted Devine perhaps as much as any maneuver that took place in his entire first year with the Pack. He has pointed out that Hardy was going to be no better than the team's third defensive tackle and more likely the fourth. Therefore, he delivered a reserve defensive tackle in return for what every team considers a premier need, a potential quarterback star.

Devine had privately confessed several weeks before the draft that "We just might take Tagge on the first round if we can get him." And later, though the selection surprised many Packer Backers because of the presence of youthful and impressive second year quarterback Scott Hunter on the roster, Devine added, "If we had waited until the second round, I don't think we would have been able to get Tagge."

Thus having bagged two of the collegians who had tickled his and his computer's fancy, Devine could afford to go after a specialist on the second round while most of the other teams were still trying to salvage a second . . . or in some cases a first . . . rounder from whom they could profit on a full time basis. Specialists, by their part-time nature, are normally not among the Claims staked in the first couple rounds.

But the Packers, with their unenviable futility in the kicking department, hooked Marcol . . . again the very man Devine had earlier designated as the leg he wanted his kicking game to swing on in 1972.

A practical man, Devine declared "We couldn't have done much better if we had planned it that way."

CHESTER MARCOL, THE EUROPEAN-STYLE KICKING SPECIALIST FROM HILLSDALE COLLEGE, DISPLAYS HIS FORM IN SPRING CAMP. HOLDER IS BART STARR.

And indeed he couldn't, especially since Buchanon looms as an instant starter, Marcol as a very probable "starter" in the place kicking and possibly punting department and Tagge as a potential starter even in the face of Bart Starr's attempt at a return to full-time duty and the one-year experience advantage belonging to Hunter.

Devine quickly placed Buchanon in what he termed a "John Brockington situation," meaning Willie was a pre-camp starter even though he is a rookie and it then is up to him to hold that position . . . cornerback.

It didn't take much to convince Doll that the 6-foot-0, 190 pound San Diego thunderbolt, who sports a dazzling 9.4 time in the 100, will indeed prove himself worthy of such non-standard treatment.

"He looks like he has all the qualities to be a starter. Lem Barney of the Lions started as a rookie, you know. All the good ones do," Doll vounteered after a brace of spring sessions and another look at the tell-tale movies.

"He has great natural ability. He does as many different things well as anybody I've ever seen," Doll added. "He has a knack of coming off a receiver and going for the ball that is exceptional. And he catches the ball exceptionally well. But the big thing about him is that his attitude is so good. He's a talented young man with a bright future." Continued on page 28

The son of a minister, the Rev. Mance Buchanon of Oceanside, Calif., Willie employed his speed on another avenue. He blocked two punts and five extra points or field goals in his senior year.

Marcol's likelihood of becoming the Packers' long-sought reliable kicker may be questioned by those who glance only at the usual statistics from his college career. These figures show that in four years he made only 30 of 81 field goals, though admirably efficient in the conversion department with 132 of 134 and a string of 104 in succession.

The field goal numbers are merely a veneer, however, for behind those numbers lies the fact that Hillsdale felt compelled to call on the 6-foot, 190 pound toeman if it was anywhere in the vicinity of the 50-yard line . . . which is 60 yards from the posts on a college gridiron.

Indicative of this is the fact that in 1970, Marcol rocketed a field goal home from his own 48-yard line, making it a 62-yard blast against a somewhat stunned Fairmont State.

While this is his longest under game conditions, the 22-year-old business administration major who came to this country from Poland only in 1965 freely acknowledges that he has made longer ones than that in practice.

JERRY TAGGE MAJORED IN PRO FOOTBALL

And if Fairmont was stunned, consider the reaction of St. Norbert College Coach Howie Kolstad when the Chargers lined up for a 77-yard field goal against his Green Knights last fall.

"It was a little short," Kolstad sighed, "but it hit over the goal line."

If nothing else, Marcol should

DON HUTSON CATCHES PRACTICE PASS FROM CECIL ISBELL IN 1942.

THE RETIRED NUMBERS

Jerry Tagge will wear Don Hutson's famed No. 14 no more.

"I'm convinced there is enough evidence to prove that No. 14 was officially retired following Don Hutson's career. I'm a great believer in tradition and the name of Hutson is symbolic of Packer greatness," Coach Dan Devine said.

Tagge, who made No. 14 famous at Nebraska, was assigned No. 14 for the Packers' two spring camps but long-time Packer fans recalled that the number had been retired. Research disclosed that the number had been officially retired between halves of a game between the Packers and old New York Yankees in Green Bay Dec. 2, 1951. Hutson's last season was 1945.

One other Packer number has been officially retired — the No. 3 worn by Tony Canadeo. Tony's number was put away for good between halves of a Canadeo Day game between the Packers and Dallas Texans in Green Bay Nov. 23, 1952. Though there has been no ceremony, Paul Hornung's No. 5 is considered retired since the late Vince Lombardi said after Hornung went to New Orleans that "there will never be another No. 5 here as long as I'm in charge."

Tagge was assigned No. 17, the number he wore as a star at Green Bay West High. Cecil Isbell, Hutson's battery-mate after Arnie Herber, also wore No. 17.

provide the Packers with kickoff depth they haven't known in a decade.

And with Donny Anderson departed for St. Louis via the trade route, Marcol could be the Packer punter as well. He averaged 43.2 yards per boot during his college career, which would put him well up in the NFL statistics as well.

Tagge's starting potential apparently rests largely in the shoulder of Starr and the attitude of Hunter as well as his own peculiar talents. Starr's shoulder and arm will remain questionable even if he should find them healed enough for early season duty. Wondering when the pain will again assert itself will never cease. Hunter has gained the confidence of his mates in one year's time but has not been as successful with the coaches, who must consider the young Alabaman's occasional personal deviations from their set norm.

Thus Tagge, whose stock in trade at Nebraska was abiding by Coach Bob Devaney's game plan even while being given considerable leeway in the matter of calling audibles, could come into favor.

And Tagge has one other possible advantage: inspiration derived from the fact that he will be playing in his hometown, where he grew up as a star athlete (All-State in football and basketball, drafted by the Washington Senators in baseball) dreaming of a chance to perform with the Packers.

The 6-foot-2, 220-pound signalist was visiting with President Richard M. Nixon as a White House guest when he was informed that the Packers had selected him.

"Lincoln (Nebraska, where the UN is located) won't be big enough to hold me tonight," he said, exploding a grin. "This has been my dream since I was a little boy. I sold popcorn and hot dogs at Lambeau Field and was an usher . . . anything to get into the games. And I never missed one."

CHESTER MARCOL'S "GOING TO KICK"

A few days later, Tagge met Starr for the first time and recalled how he had been an usher at the famed Ice Bowl NFL championship game in Green Bay when Starr pulled his hallowed quarterback sneak to beat the Cowboys in one of the most dramatic finishes in pro football history.

"I jumped over the railing just before that play and was standing right on the sidelines at the goal line when Bart scored," he smiled.

And now he's trying to take Starr's job.

Very much aware, however, that pro football insiders insist it takes three to five years for a collegian to develop into a refined NFL quarterback, Tagge quietly asserts "I think it all depends on your college training."

As a two time Orange Bowl hero as well as field guide for the double national champion Cornhuskers, Tagge feels that his training has been particularly good. In fact, he says he freely admits he went to college seeking a career in pro football and therefore "majored" in it.

It remains to be seen if his potential brings him to the same level of promise owned by Marcol and/or the instant start-dom belonging to Buchanon.

DID YOU KNOW . . . ABOUT THE PACKERS' DRAFT?

Of course, you didn't know . . . or have forgotten:

Item: The Packers never — in the 37 years of the NFL player selection draft—went to the picking table without a first choice to make for their own use.

Few clubs can make that distinction — especially the older, more established teams.

Item: Only five of the first choices never wore a Packer uniform — despite wars with two leagues — plus Canada.

The Packers lost their top picks in the heat of the war with the old All-America Conference in 1946-47. The 1946 pick, Halfback Johnny Strzykalski of Marquette went to the Forty-Niners, and the following year Quarterback Ernie Case of UCLA went to the Colts, staying one year before quitting football. Strzykalski played seven years.

Others defecting: Bob Gain, Kentucky tackle, went to Canada in 1951 and then rights to him were traded to the Browns. He later starred for the Browns for years. Quarterback Randy Duncan of Iowa, the 1959 top pick, went to Canada and then played one year with the old Dallas Texans in the AFL. End Larry Elkins, the 1965 first pick, played at Houston.

Of the five, only Strzykalski and Gain became established pro stars.

Item: The Packers came out with 44 first choices in the 37 years, getting double picks in 1957 (bonus choice Paul Hornung) and in 1965, 1966, 1967, 1968, 1970 and 1972 as the result of trades. The other extras were Donny Anderson, Jim Grabowski, Bob Hyland, Fred Carr, Mike McCoy and Jerry Tagge.

Item: The Packers selected seven quarterbacks as first choices and only one became a super star, though not at quarterback. That would be Hornung, who struggled at QB in his rookie season before shifting to running back. The others were Case, 1947; Stan Heath, 1949; Babe Parilli, 1952; Duncan; and Don Horn, 1967.

The jury is still out on Tagge.

Item: The Packers received just one first choice in 1971 but Don Horn figured in bringing two starters, including one all-pro, John Brockington. Horn was traded to Denver for the Broncos' 9th position in the draft and Defensive End Al Roche, who became a regular. The 9th pick enabled the Pack to draft Brockington. The Packers had the 12th position and the Bears had planned to nab Brock on the 11th.

To add pleasure Brockington was a big factor in the Packers' two-game sweep over the Bears and their victory over Horn and the Broncos.

1972 the draftee's

The Packers came out of the 1972 draft with 16 players — one under the limit. Four choices were traded off in earlier deals and three, including a first pick, were obtained in trades.

Green Bay selected eight offensive players, including three wide receivers and three running backs; seven defensive players, including three linebackers; and one specialist, kicker Chester Marcol.

Of the 442 draftees selected by the 26 teams, 224 were ticketed for offense and 208 for defense. Ten specialists were chosen.

Here are the Packers' draft choices and the figures in parens designate the order of selection among the 442 players:

the BLACK and BLUE DIVISION

By CHUCK JOHNSON
The Milwaukee Journal

Norm Van Brocklin, the Dutchman who used to coach the Minnesota Vikings, named it.

The Black and Blue Division.

And the name has stuck and fits only too well the Central Division of the National Football Conference of the National Football League.

The Vikings, under Van Brocklin's successor, Harry (Bud) Grant, are still in it and dominating it. They have won the division title the last four seasons.

And the Green Bay Packers, who won the division's first title in the late Vince Lombardi's last year as their coach, are in it, and so are the Detroit Lions and the Chicago Bears.

The Black and Blue Division!

Here is where the hitters are. A little finesse, of course, but a lot of hitting, much impact, many collisions.

The figures do not lie. Defense is the key. Rugged defense. More rugged, in fact, when the Vikings and Packers and Lions and Bears get together than when they play against outsiders from the rest of the National Football League.

The figures are there to see in a table accompanying this piece, and they tell a lot about life in the Black and Blue Division.

Grant and Joe Schmidt at Detroit, both former NFL players, have been their teams' coaches through all five years of the division's existence. The Packers and Bears each have had three coaches, if you count the change the Bears made after last season. Lombardi was succeeded by Phil Bengtson and then Dan Devine at Green Bay. George Halas, who owns the Bears, was succeeded by Jim Dooley and Dooley by Abe Gibron for the 1972 season.

The tough defense of the division is by design. Lombardi believed in it, and the Packers lived by defense in Lombardi's fantastic nine years as coach of the team. Five NFL titles, two Super Bowl victories. This was attained by a defense that forced other teams to make mistakes, and by an offense that made few mistakes of its own.

MINNESOTA VIKINGS

Grant, who played for the Philadelphia Eagles before he left for Canada, first to play football and then to coach it, followed Lombardi's precepts closely in molding his Vikings.

Success for Grant starts at home, obviously, for the Vikings have dominated their three Central Division rivals in a rather alarming fashion the last four years.

When Devine took over the Packers, one of his first observations was that Green Bay was not going any place until the Packers achieved some success against their division rivals.

In Devine's first year with the Packers, they still didn't go any place, but there was better performance within the division—.500 performance to be exact—and the Packers weren't that far from doing even better than that.

The pivotal game of the 1971 season, in fact, undoubtedly was played at Metropolitan Stadium in Bloomington, the home of the Vikings.

Devine's Packers took the play away from Grant's Vikings almost from start to finish. But Minnesota's defense, while it bent, never broke, and the Packers gave up the ball on downs on Minnesota's one yard line, gave up the ball on a fumble inside the 10 yard line and finally gave up the ball on an interception at the goal line.

The interception, by Charlie West on Scott Hunter's pass intended for Rich McGeorge, turned the game around. West returned to midfield, the Vikings drove into position and a field goal by Fred Cox gave the Vikings a 3-0 victory.

That, for all purposes, ended the Packers' season. And the Vikings kept going to another title.

It was almost eery after that game, watching the Vikings tromp past into their lockerroom. No shouts of victory. No smiles. No laughing. They had won the game after being thoroughly beaten.

Later in the season, after the Thanksgiving Day game in which the Lions had beaten the Kansas City Chiefs in Detroit, Joe Schmidt, the Lions coach, was holding forth on some good fortune that the Lions had enjoyed that afternoon.

"If you think we're lucky," he said in answer to one writer's question "you should see the Vikings."

Schmidt perhaps was prejudiced, because despite improvement by leaps and bounds, the Lions have finished second the last two seasons, behind the Vikings. In 1970, their record was good enough to earn the runnerup's spot in the playoffs, but they lost to the Dallas Cowboys in the first round. Last year, the Lions didn't quite make it, as the Washington Redskins edged them out as the NFC's best runnerup, at least on the record.

When the Packers were raising havoc with the rest of the NFL, two of the leading exponents of sabotaging the opposing backs were Willie Davis at end and Henry Jordan at tackle.

Both are retired now, but the Vikings have risen to the top through a similar combination — Carl Eller at end and Alan Page at tackle.

Page, in fact, was so good in 1971 that he was named the NFL's Most Valuable Player, an honor usually reserved for offensive players, and usually quarterbacks at that. Page's principal complaint in the off-season was that he hadn't received the offers to appear in TV commercials that a quarterback would have.

Another trademark of the Central Division is the bruising play of the middle linebackers — Ray Nitschke in his heyday at Green Bay (with Jim Carter learning the trade there now), Dick Butkus with the Chicago Bears, Mike Lucci with the Detroit Lions and Lonnie Warwick with the Minnesota Vikings.

Minnesota's defense, in all departments, has been good enough to withstand the loss of quarterback Joe Kapp, who played out his option after leading the Vikings to the Super Bowl. The Vikings got by with Gary Cuozzo and Norm Snead and Bob Lee in the interim, while Kapp first went to the Boston Patriots, then disappeared from pro football because he wouldn't sign a standard contract.

Now the Vikings will have Fran Tarkenton, the scrambler, at quarterback once again. Tarkenton caused the Central Division many problems before he had a falling out with Van Brocklin, a disagreement that led both of them to jump ship, so to speak.

Tarkenton was traded to the New York Giants. In return, the Vikings received some of the draft choices with which General Manager Jim Finks and Grant built a top contender.

Now Tarkenton is back, and Page, among others, expressed the opinion that the Vikings had paid too high a price.

The opinion brought a gentle rebuff from Finks: "We've asked a good many things of Alan during the course of the year, but one of them wasn't for assistance in making trades."

SPECIAL ATTENTION TO SPECIAL TEAMS

By CHUCK LANE
Green Bay Packer Public Relations Director

All professional football teams are a reflection of the head coach and championship teams reflect efficiency, discipline and astringent avoidance of mistakes.

With this in mind, Coach Dan Devine has added additional coaching personnel in order to build the Packers into "his kind of team."

A bigger rebuilding job was needed than most Packer faithful were willing to concede, but now that the corner has been turned and brighter days lie ahead, the Packers find themselves with the largest coaching staff in history.

Indicative of the attention to detail that has proven to be an Achilles in years past is the appointment of a special teams coach in the person of Hank Kuhlmann. After playing for Devine at Missouri for one year and coaching for him at his alma mater for nine more, Hank is a respected addition to the staff. His duties will be to coordinate all kicking teams: kickoff, receiving, punting and receiving, extra point, field goal, and free kick units.

Often times in the past four years, all that separated the Packers from contention was a blocked or missed field goal, a crucial breakdown on kick coverage or a mental error due to lack of attention to special teams duties.

In preparation for Kuhlmann's appointment, Devine stated last year that the selection of personnel in 1972 would be predicated on athletes' ability to play on the specialty squads. This year this element of the game will receive full attention.

In years past, the special teams were regarded strictly as apprenticeship for a starting position, manned largely by younger men whose only hope for attention was the application of a "bell-ringer" on the opposition. While juggernaut football is still mandatory, "suicide team" is an expression that is seldom used as science continues to replace strict brawn in professional football.

LLOYD EATON, NEW DIRECTOR OF PLAYER PERSONNEL

Another new face on the staff is John Polonchek, who at the end of last year resigned from the Oakland Raider staff and was hired by Devine in April of this year. John will apply his knowledge to the Packer passing game, replacing Bob Schnelker who has since become the head offensive coach of the San Diego Chargers. Polonchek has been with the AFC's most consistent winners, the Raiders, since 1967 and has five years collegiate experience at Michigan State and Colorado.

In the player personnel department, new direction is also evident. Named last May, Lloyd Eaton brings with him 27 years of football coaching experience and an overall 103-44-5 record. He replaces Pat Peppler, who has joined the Miami Dolphins.

Eaton was the top defensive assistant at Wyoming for five years under Bob Devaney and as head coach at Wyoming, Lloyd's teams posted a 57-33-2 record, sporting the top defense in the nation during the 60's.

Following 14 years at Wyoming, as well as several years at smaller schools (he was the head coach at Northern Michigan in 1956, and was named small college coach of the year that season), Lloyd joined the Cuadra Scouting Combine, representing the Los Angeles Rams, Dallas Cowboys, San Francisco 49'ers and San Diego Chargers in the search for collegiate talent.

As a promotion, Dave Hanner, seven years as Green Bay's defensive line coach, has been advanced to overall defensive coordinator, and will be working with Don Doll (second year, secondary) and Burt Gustafson (second year, linebackers) on the young Packer defense.

The offensive alignment includes Red Cochran (10th year), working with offensive backs, John Polonchek, receivers and the passing game, and Rollie Dotsch (second year), in charge of the offensive line.

Only Cochran and Hanner are veterans of the Packers' Championship years, but with the new men has come new veins of thinking and consequent difficulties by the opposition in anticipating Packer strategy. Frequency charts are as much a part of preparation for an opponent as the names of the personnel and a change in philosophy will also have a rejuvenation effect. With this in mind, Devine continues to build his kind of organization, leaving nothing to chance.

On the player personnel, the Packers rate as the third youngest team in the 26-club NFL.

Thirty-eight rookies have made the club since 1968 and 28 of them are still on the roster. Thus, with an average of 5.1 years the Packers are indeed young. And that average is misleading because of the presence of Bart Starr, Ray Nitschke and Carroll Dale, who have a combined total of 42 years of experience.

OLE HONORED

DOMINIC OLEJNICZAK

Dominic Olejniczak, onetime mayor of Green Bay, is now serving his 15th consecutive term as president of the Packers . . . and his contribution to the Packers was recognized — twice — at the 11th annual Elks sports award banquet last spring.

Olejniczak was presented the coveted Arnie Herber award by Art Rooney, president and owner of the Pittsburgh Steelers, and Rooney noted: "Ole is highly respected around the league for his honesty and sincerity. He has contributed much to the National Football League. He is a good man."

Ole was a recipient of a second "award" — a set of luggage from Fred N. Trowbridge, Sr., veteran Packer treasurer, who said he was making the presentation on behalf of "the stockholders and directors."

Trowbridge noted: "Ole's travel time lately has been almost equal to that of Mayor Yorty, so we are presenting this luggage to him with our compliments and our deep appreciation for his faithfulness and his astute handling of Packer affairs."

Olejniczak said, "there are so many people who have given so much of their time, talent and means to the Packers over the last 50 years, who could have received this award. I think particularly of our executive committee and board of directors who have been a tremendous help to me as president. To them, I will always be grateful. They should share this recognition."

This figure takes on more significance when it is considered that the reigning world champion Cowboys are the second oldest team with an average of 6.6 years pro experience. And the Vikings are close behind with 6.4 George Allen's over-the-hill gang in Washington averages 7.1 years, tops by far.

There is one saliently positive aspect to the Packers' rebuilding process, which Devine is now pursuing with care and deliberation. That is the fact that 1971 was a banner year. Ten rookies made the regular roster, including NFC Rookie of the Year John Brockington, and an 11th, wide receiver Sam Dickerson, dug a toe-hold on the taxi squad and now is expected to be a prime contender for a starting berth at split end.

In addition to Brockington and Dickerson, 1971's successful yearlings included Scott Hunter, Dave Davis, Jim DeLisle, Ken Duncan, Len Garrett, Charlie Hall, Donnell Smith, Tim Webster, and Wimpy Winther.

The 1970 crop was only slightly less productive. Nine first year men, headed by Mike McCoy, Rich McGeorge and Jim Carter, made the grade. The others were Larry Krause, Al Matthews, Ken Ellis, Frank Patrick, Mike Carter, and Clarence Williams, acquired in the Herb Adderley trade.

The rookie "qualifiers" since 1968, with those no longer with the team in parenthesis:

1968 — Bill Lueck, Fred Carr, Dick Himes, (Bill Stevens, Francis Winkler, Gordon Rule, Leon Crenshaw, Leo Carroll).

1969 — Dave Bradley, John Spilis, Perry Williams, Bill Hayhoe, Dave Hampton, (Rich Moore, Ron Jones).

1970 — Mike McCoy, Rich McGeorge, Al Matthews, Ken Ellis, Larry Krause, Jim Carter, Mike Carter, Frank Patrick, Clarence Williams, (Ervin Hunt, Cleo Walker, Leon Harden).

1971 — John Brockington, Dave Davis, Jim DeLisle, Ken Duncan, Len Garrett, Charlie Hall, Scott Hunter, Donnell Smith, Tim Webster, Wimpy Winther, Sam Dickerson.

As for now, linebacking is my job. I'm not giving it up and looking for a new job when I haven't mastered the first one."

And where was Jim Carter? In the middle. Learning. Trying to keep his composure when the fans chanted, "We Want Nitschke."

The development of a middle linebacker — one that, as Hanner said, "will very likely be there for a number of years" — was achieved under trying conditions. But it was achieved.

"Last year Nitschke probably should have played more than he did," Hanner admitted. "But damn, if we had not played Carter we would have had the same problem this year.

"I have a world of respect for Ray and I think he can do some things better than Jim. But a lot of things he can't. And age is something you can't hide. The only way a guy is going to learn and improve is to get in there and stay in there. You'll have to take your lumps."

Carter took more than his share of lumps during the first half of the season.

Coach Bud Grant of the Minnesota Vikings, however, pointed out the striking difference in Carter's progress from the fifth game to the ninth game.

"We had some things planned for him," Grant said after the Vikings edged the Packers, 3-0, on Nov. 14. "We figured we could cut him off, but he ran right through the blocks and made the plays. There is no comparison with the way he played this time and the way he played the first time we met."

Carter was keenly aware of the great affection the fans demonstrated for the man he replaced every time Nitschke made an appearance. "I have to admit those cheers don't send my ego soaring way up there," Carter said. "But I don't think they are against me, but for Ray. I hope that whenever Ray retires and I'm here that there will be no lingering animosity on the fans' part. That's the only way I look at it. That's the only way I have to look at it."

With Robinson, Carr, and Carter and backed up by Nitschke and Tommy Joe Crutcher, there are no obvious soft spots at linebackers. If they could board a streetcar named desire, the last stop would be in Los Angeles at the Super Bowl.

RAY NITSCHKE ADDRESSES LAMBEAU FIELD CROWD ON "HIS DAY" AGAINST BEARS DEC. 12, 1971.

THE RECORD BOOK

URAM'S RUN STILL THE LONGEST

ANDY URAM . . . IN 1946

The Packers have the ball on their own 2 or 3-yard line . . . what are the odds on a 97 or 98-yard run from scrimmage? 16,500 to 1, maybe, and still going up.

The oldest record on the Packer books is Andy Uram's 97-yard run from scrimmage against the Chicago Cardinals on Oct. 8, 1939. This 33-year-old mark also stands as an NFL record, though it was tied by Bob Gage of the Steelers against the Bears Dec. 4, 1949.

Since Uram's run the Packers reeled off roughly 16,500 runs from scrimmage and the closest any back came was Jim Taylor who had an 84-yard run against the Lions in 1964. Tom Moore has the third longest — a 77-yard run vs. the Lions in 1963. The fourth longest was a 73-yard rush by Billy Grimes against the Bears in 1950.

Despite all the great backs in league and Packer history, the long run has been a rarity. Why? Uram has a thought on the subject:

"Faster defensive backs might make the difference now. Most of them are track stars. They have to be to cover the fast receivers. The running backs, by comparison to the defensive backs, aren't as fast. They are bigger and designed more for power."

Uram, who played at 186 pounds, also pointed to defense now. "Most teams play a four-man line and once you get through the line you must go through fast linebackers and backs. We generally ran against seven and six-man lines," he explained.

Andy was in a backfield with Arnie Herber, Clarke Hinkle and Hank Bruder when he made his record run in old State Fair Park in Milwaukee.

"It was third down and we were trying to move the ball toward the center of the field to give us better punting position on fourth down. I just ran off right tackle and there didn't seem to be anybody around," the onetime Minnesota star laughed. The hash marks were only 10 yards from the sidelines in those days and it was customary to get center-field position for punts. The Packers won the game 27-20.

No new individual or team season records were set in 1971, although Bart Starr added to his career records in passing. Donny Anderson, traded off to the Cardinals during the off-season, finished as the Packers' busiest punter — 315 in six years.

As in the past the following all-time Packer records are presented with apologies to all those Packer stars who played before records were kept:

HASHES and HALVES

The National Football League will display a new look on the field and in the standings in 1972 . . . and one of the moves came some 40 years too late for the Packers.

Under rules adopted by the NFL at their winter meetings, ties will count in the standings and the inbounds (hash marks) markers will be moved an additional 3½ yards more toward the center of the field.

Starting this season ties will be counted as one-half game won and one-half game lost in calculating won-lost percentages. Here's an example:

OLD METHOD

Team A	8	3	3	.727
Team B	9	4	1	.692

NEW METHOD

Team A	8	3	3	.679
Team B	9	4	1	.679

Under the new method, each team in the example would have its percentage based on 9½ victories and 4½ losses—hence the figure of .679 for each team compared to the previous system that figured Team A's percentage on the basis of 11 games played to decision and Team B's percentage on the basis of 13 games. The new rule means all team percentages must be computed on the basis of 14 games played.

This system would have given the Packers the championship in 1932 when the Bears finished with 7-1-6, the Packers 10-3-1. Packer great Johnny Blood said, "it's a little late but we would have been the only team to win four straight (championships) with that system," referring to the fact that the Packers had won titles in 1929-30-31 before bumping into the Bears' tie-laden '32 season.

The hash marks now will be 23 yards, 1 foot, 9 inches from each sideline. The new marks will line up with each goal post, leaving the width between the hash marks the exact width of the crossbar, 18 feet, 6 inches.

The new hash marks serve the purpose of widening the field for offensive exploitation and, in theory, will aid the run, pass and kick. The runners will have more room to run toward the sidelines and the passers will be helped against zone defenses because the change stretches the zones of responsibility for linebackers and deep backs. Field goal kickers will also get better angles for their boots.

To keep punters from "conflicting" with the goal posts the ball will be moved 20 yards out (instead of 23-plus) on fourth down situations when the ball is on the 15-yard line or within.

In another rule change, it now will be possible to return a punt from the end zone. Previously, it was a touchback. Kickoffs and missed field goals can still be returned from the end zone.

TRY PICKING THE WHOLE SEASON

Everybody is an expert when it comes to picking an occasional winner of a National Football League game.

Try it for the whole season . . . you'll like it.

Get the family together or your neighbors and set up a contest.

We've made it convenient for you amateur (or pro) pickers by "adding to" the NFL schedule on the next two pages. The usual two boxes are still there for you to make your check marks on which team you think will win. We've added spaces behind each team to write the final score. Thus, you can easily keep track of the "rights" and "wrongs" or, if you wish, the "wins" or "losses" as the season progresses.

The Green Bay Press-Gazette has conducted a contest among members of its sports department for quite a few years. Veteran scribe Jim Zima won it the last two years. He had a record of 116 right (wins), 57 wrong (losses) and 9 ties for a percentage of .671 in 1970 and 118-56-8 for .678 in 1971.

Anything close to 70 per cent would have to be considered excellent — especially with 13 difficult games every weekend. It can be tough and a good example was the opening games of the 1971 season. There were at least four upsets, the Giants beating the Packers, the Cardinals over the Redskins, the Patriots over the Raiders and the Chargers over the Chiefs. Remember? Not one of the Press-Gazette pickers even managed .500. Champion Zima had four right, eight wrong and one tie.

Be sure and set a deadline for all your contestants to make their picks. Friday night is best . . . or even as late as Saturday noon.

Then sit back, and sweat and watch the scoreboard on Sunday.

Oh yes . . . don't forget to figure out a prize of some sort for the winner. In Zima's case, he hosted the party but the losers brought the refreshments.

NATIONAL PRO FOOTBALL HALL OF FAME

SIX DIFFERENT NUMBERS

Some of the early Packers wore as many as six different numbers . . . six?

"When somebody left town," Packer great Mike Michalske recalled, "you sometimes wore his number."

"We didn't have a lot of jerseys in those days. We tried to keep the same number since it became part of you but if something happened to your jersey we'd grab another one. We didn't bother to change the number," Mike added.

Michalske wore Nos. 19, 22, 28, 31, 33 and 36. "I felt like 36 was my real number because I wore it most of the time in my later years," Michalske said.

The Hall of Fame in Canton, O., has made a study of its members' numbers. Besides Michalske, the Hall of Famer discovered that two other Packer Famers each wore six numbers. Johnny (Blood) McNally wore Nos. 14, 15, 20, 24, 55 and 57, with 24 being his "major" number. Cal Hubbard was known mostly for his 27 but he also sported 38, 39, 40, 41 and 51.

Packer fullback star Clarke Hinkle is widely known for his No. 30 but earlier he wore 39 and 41. "We (the Packers) were rich in Hink's later years and they had two jerseys with 30 on them," said, Michalske. The late Arnie Herber wore 12, 38 and 41, with 38 remaining as his trademark.

Curly Lambeau, the Packers' founder, once wore No. 1, which was appropriate, but he also wore 14 and 20. No. 14 became his "regular" number and it was fitting that this number was assigned to the Packers' most famous player, Don Hutson, who wore it through his 11-year career.

Seven is the most popular number in the Hall of Fame, what with the addition of Ace Parker this year. Parker joins immortals George Halas, Bob Waterfield, Mel Hein and Dutch Clark, also seven-bearers.

Parker, the onetime Duke star who held up mediocre pro team for seven years, is one of four additions to the Hall of Fame this year.

Joining him were Lamar Hunt, founder of the American Football League and owner of the Kansas City Chiefs; Gino Marchetti, the great defensive end of the Colts; and Ollie Matson, a rugged 15-year back who played with the Cardinals, Rams, Lions and Eagles.

One Cat leads to another.

Funny thing about Arctic Cat owners. They stay Cat owners. 9 out of 10 come back for another one the next time around. Because Cat owners know what they're looking for and they know when they've found it.

Funny thing about Arctic Cat owners' neighbors, too. They become Cat owners. How about you? Have you come over to Cat?
